Student Instructor for Hacky Hours Study Cafe

We are looking for a dedicated and academically strong student instructor to support fellow history students working independently on digital projects in relevant courses like Kildenært emne or BA-projects. The support will take place through a hacky hour study café in the library, two hours a week (22 hours in total). The Hacky Hour Study Café is meant to support the use of tools introduced in DAM in other courses and student projects.

Employment period 1 September – 31 December 2026.
Responsibilities
As a student instructor, you will:

- Help students contextualize and apply the tools introduced in DAM to new projects.
- Assist with troubleshooting their machines and support their understanding of core concepts.
- Guide students in working on their own project.
- Demonstrate best practices and foster the development of computational thinking.
- In short: "Teach students how to fish – and occasionally hand out a free fish."

We expect that you:
- Have completed the DAM course or a related subject with good results.
- Are interested in teaching and motivated to help others understand complex topics.
- Are patient, approachable, and able to communicate technical material in an accessible way.

We offer:
- A stimulating and rewarding student job where you strengthen both your academic and teaching skills.
- An inspiring learning environment where you can make a real difference for your fellow students.

Application
Please send a short motivated application and your CV and upload via this link.
